

Dr. Jodi Meadows

Jodi Meadows has built her career around helping people learn and grow. She began as a music educator, earning degrees from Southwest Baptist University and Missouri State University before teaching students of all ages. Her love for learning later brought her back to SBU as an Assistant Professor of University Studies, and soon after as Director of the Gordon and Judy Dutile Honors Program. During that time, she completed her PhD in Educational Psychology at Regent University and became an active presenter and contributor within the National Collegiate Honors Council.

In 2021, Jodi served as an Associate Pastor at the Venues, applying her curriculum expertise to programs for children and adults. She joined CoxHealth the following year as a Learning Consultant, leading the redevelopment of leadership development programs after COVID-19. Today, as Manager of Learning Programs, she guides a team focused on change management, training, and communication for major software transitions, with upcoming responsibilities in leadership development and instructional design.

Jodi remains actively engaged in her community through the Ozarks Literacy Council Board, the Leadership Springfield Curriculum Committee, Friends of the Library and Missouri State Choral Union. She and her husband, Daniel, have been married for 32 years and are the proud parents of four strong, young-adult daughters.
